Course Description

The secondary 2 Geography program focuses on the concept of territory, defined as a social space that human beings occupy, modify and to which they give meaning and a specific form of organization. The study of problems that arise from the use and organization of space is primarily dealt with. Since discovering the organization of a territory requires the inclusion of elements of the physical environment in the analysis of social phenomenon, both elements of physical and social geography are taught in this course. Students view territories not in isolation, but rather in a broader perspective, in relation to the world, by integrating different scales. The program encourages students to become responsible, to become aware of the distinctive features of other territories and to understand the need for the equitable sharing of the world's habitable space. Moreover, it develops geographic reasoning. Students are called upon to construct chains of explanation, argumentation or narrative, all of which are lines of reasoning that allow them to understand human actions upon territories in constant change. Concepts dealing with the meaning human beings place on their actions in territories (motives, symbolism, landmarks, heritage), as well as, lines of reasoning expressed using the language of Geography and cartography, will be covered in this course.
